To Henrietta Meade:

(Daughter) CAMP AT HUNTER’S MILLS, VA. March 13, 1862.

“I think a great deal about you, and all the other children. I often picture to myself as I last saw you—you, yourself, Sarah and Willie lying in bed, crying, because I had to go away, and while I was scolding you for crying, I felt like crying myself. It is very hard to be kept away from you, because there is no man on earth that loves his children more dearly than I do, or whose happiness is more depending on being with his family. Duty, however, requires me to be here, to do the little I can to defend our old flag, and whatever duty requires us to do, we should all, old and young, do cheerfully, however disagreeable it may be. We came here, expecting to have a big fight with the Seceshers, but they have all cleared out...”

Meade Room in the Grand Army of the Republic Museum – Old Baldy, General Meade’s horse’s head, has been looking over a room filled with Meade historic mementos for many years. You can imagine what Old Baldy saw while riding into battle with Meade in the saddle. His noble countenance is very lifelike, and you can see him for yourself while visiting the Museum during their Sunday programs. Here are some of the GAR programs for 2018:

January 14 - Holiday Band Concert by the 28th Pennsylvania Volunteers Regimental Band Geary's Own

February 4 - Alan Silverman – Lincoln Line Drawing

March 4 - Randall Miller - Northern Home Front during the Civil War

May 6 - Joe Mieczkowski - After Gettysburg -Lee retreats, Meade pursues

October 7 - A Civil War Captain and His Lady: A True Story of Love, Courtship, and Combat by author, Gene Barr.

2017 Meade Society Fall Trip “Boston and the Civil War”, October 7, 8 & 9 –

Our Hagey bus, filled with eager Civil War stalwarts, left the Cannstatter in Northeast Philly at 7:30. There must have been a tailwind as the trip to Boston went quickly. We did stop for lunch at the Old Mystic Village, Mystic, Connecticut. The weather was perfect for roaming around the shops and eating outside. Old Mystic represents a New England Village of about 1720.

After arriving at our motel in Dedham, Massachusetts, we had time to explore the new Legacy Place Shopping Center – 675,000 square feet containing 75 brand stores including the brick-and-mortar Amazon Store that features a mix of books based on customer reviews and electronic devices. This was our excursion into the present before exploring the past.
The Saturday night pizza party, hosted by our Treasurer and Trip Organizer, Jerry McCormick, was highlighted by the recognition of those who have been on these Meade historical trips for the past 5, 10 and 15 years. We have been very successful over the past 16 years in filling the bus for these weekend visits to Civil War sites, with occasional side trips to wineries, breweries and America’s natural wonders.

Day 2 at Quincy Market, Boston’s historic market complex near Faneuil Hall. It was constructed in 1824-26 and named in honor of Mayor Josiah Quincy. It is a National Historic Landmark that is the largest market built in the United States in the first half of the 19th century.

Part of the Boston Harbor Islands National Park is Georges Island home our next destination, Fort Warren. It was a beautiful fall morning when we boarded the ferry and then cruised pass the Boston skyline. Fort Warren is an impressive pentagonal star-shaped fort constructed between 1833-1860. The Fort served as a prison for Confederate officers and government officials. James Mason and John Slidell, the Confederate diplomats seized in the Trent Affair, were among those held at the Fort. Also held at the Fort were Confederate Vice President Alexander Stevens and Postmaster General John Reagan.

Our guide wore an old ranger hat and long coat with countenance to match. He lead us into the bowels of the Fort where we literally had to hold hands in the total darkness in order find our way out. He told us the story of the Fort’s reputed ghost, the Lady in Black. She was the wife of a Confederate prisoner. After hearing that her husband was imprisoned in the Fort she was compelled to free him. On a stormy night in January 1862, she rowed across to Georges Island and went ashore. She cut her hair, dressed as a man and armed herself with a pistol. She signaled to her husband by whistling an obscure southern tune, to which he signaled back. After squeezing through the slit-window of his cell she was hidden by the Confederate soldiers.

The plan was to dig a tunnel to the center of the Fort and then overtake the guards and obtain weapons. Unfortunately for them the tunnel was discovered. As The Lady sprang from the tunnel, she succeeded in surprising an officer who slapped the pistol from her hand. The pistol went off and the bullet struck and killed her husband. She was condemned to death by hanging and her final request was to be given female clothing. A search of the Fort produced nothing but some black robes. She was executed in these robes and buried on the Island.

In the afternoon we were back to Quincy Market for lunch – clam chowder, baked beans and brown bread, lobster rolls and Boston cream pie. A sextet street band playing Star Wars jazz provided the entertainment.

Then it was time to meet our guide for the afternoon, the very entertaining and Boston legion, Richard Goldfine. Our first stop was Harvard University’s Memorial Hall. This High Victorian Gothic building was built to honor the sacrifices made by Harvard men in defense of the Union during the Civil War – “a symbol of Boston’s commitment to the Unionist cause and the abolitionist movement in America”. The Memorial Transept consists of a 60-foot high gothic vault above a marble floor, black walnut paneling and stenciled walls. There are 28 white tablets commemorating 136 Harvard men who died fighting for the Union, including Robert Gould Shaw, Colonel of the first all-black 54th Massachusetts Regiment.
We next stopped at the Boston Public Garden and in front of the Wendell Phillips Statue, the famous abolitionist and advocate for Native Americans. Above the statue is his quote, “Whether in chains or in laurels liberty knows nothing but victory”.

Crossing the street from the Garden we reached Boston Common, home of the August Saint-Gaudens bronze relief sculpture depicting Colonel Robert Gould Shaw and the Massachusetts 54th Regiment marching down Beacon Street on May 28, 1863. It was unveiled May 31, 1897. An inscription on the relief reads Omnia Relenqvit / Servare Rempublicam (He left behind everything to save the Republic).

Our last day started at Mount Auburn Cemetery, the first rural cemetery in the United States, dedicated in 1831. Its abundance of classical monuments set in a rolling landscaped terrain was a very pleasurable experience. It is not only a cemetery, but and arboretum and event place. It is Watertown’s largest contiguous open space and extends into Cambridge.

The cemetery has three notable buildings; the 62-foot tall Washington Tower, Bigelow Chapel and the Story Chapel and Administration Building. More than 93,000 people are buried in the cemetery. Among them are Mary Baker Eddy, Edward Everett, Fannie Farmer, Felix Frankfurter, Curt Gowdy, Julia Ward Howe, Henry Cabot Lodge, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Charles Sumner.

We made a quick stop at the Bunker Hill Monument before heading to the Boston Navy Yard and a visit to the recently refurbished U.S.S. Constitution, “Old Ironsides” and the U.S.S. Cassin Young, a World War II destroyer. Captain Cassin Young (1894-1942) was awarded the Medal of Honor for his heroism at the attack on Pearl Harbor and was later killed in the Naval Battle of Guadalcanal.

Our last stop was at the birthplace of Clara Barton in North Oxford, Massachusetts. She was born there on Christmas day, 1821. Currently there is a fresh air camp for inner-city youth on the surrounding property as a living memorial to Clara’s philosophy of helping others. On the this site there is also The Barton Center for Diabetes Education, a separate independent corporation that administers health education programs.

Another successful trip organized by Jerry and Betty McCormick. We thank you them for another great job. – Joe Perry

The Picnic Day Committee of Jeanne & Tom O'Toole and Michael Wunsch worked diligently to make the event a most enjoyable one, and succeeded in fine fashion. The four-hour picnic featured a beautiful Fall day, and Philadelphia favorites hoagies and light beverages compliments of the society, additionally the attendees supplied wonderful side dishes, salads, desserts, camaraderie and spirited conversation about the good General.

The committee extends a thank you to all those who supplied tables, chairs, ice, and all the amenities that made the day a comfortable and pleasant social experience!

At the Alexander Milne Calder designed Meade Equestrian Monument, a flag placement was held as the faithful stood in its front, and a moment of silence was observed for Gen. Meade, his contemporary military officers, and the brave soldiers under his command.

Picnic Committee member Mike Wunsch offered words of welcome, and asked that the attendees remember and visit the many Gen. Meade related sites in the city. (Gen. Meade Equestrian Monument, GAR Museum and Library, Laurel Hill Cemetery, the Smith Memorial, the Meade Home on Delancey Place, and Saint Marks Church)

Society President, Anthony Waskie recalled the character and career of Gen. Meade, and echoed the words of General Alexander Webb, Gettysburg hero, Medal of Honor recipient and Meade’s Chief of Staff, when Webb referred to General Meade as, "The soul of honor, the soldier, scholar and gentleman", also giving praise and encouragement to members and friends of the Gen. Meade Society of Philadelphia to continue its fine efforts.

The keynote address was delivered by society member Robert Hanrahan in the person of General John Gibbon, friend and army commander, "Gen. Gibbon" remarked in his oration at the 1887 Dedication ceremony, that "We are gathered here today, nearly fifteen years after this distinguished soldier crossed the great river, to inaugurate in his honor, this fitting memorial to his bravery and distinguished services as a soldier, his high toned honorable character as a man and his virtues and integrity as a citizen of this great republic."

At the conclusion of the ceremonies at the monument, Professor Waskie conducted a tour of the Smith Memorial, the Smith Memorial Arch is an American Civil War monument at the South Concourse and Lansdowne Drive. Built on the former grounds of the 1876 Centennial Exposition, it serves as a gateway to West Fairmount Park. The Memorial consists of two colossal columns supported by curving, neo-Baroque arches, and adorned with 13 individual portrait sculptures (2 equestrians, 3 figures, and 8 busts); two eagles standing on globes; and architectural reliefs of 8 allegorical figures.

The statue of General Meade by Daniel Chester French atop the south column is the highest monument to Gen. Meade in the nation, funded by Richard Smith (1821 - 1894) beginning in 1891, its last sculpture was completed and placed in 1912. - Michael Wunsch
